PIONEER MINING TOWN STILL CAPITAL OF KLAMATH EMPIRE

By GARY SCHWARTZ

Orleans is Klamath's historic mining town—place rich in romance and legend, which was once the seat of a mighty and bold Empire. It is called the Klamath Empire because of the gold and silver which were here in the early days of the century.

It was here in Orleans in 1852 that the first gold was discovered in the Klamath Empire. The discovery was made by a man named James W. Wadsworth, who was a pioneer miner. He was a man of great energy and vision, and he was the first to see the possibilities of the Klamath Empire. He was the first to see that the Klamath Empire was not just a place of gold and silver, but a place of great beauty and interest.

Wadsworth's discovery led to the development of Orleans as a mining town. It was a place of great activity and interest, and it was the center of the Klamath Empire. It was a place where men came to work and to live, and it was a place where the history of the Klamath Empire was being written.
