Research and Document Collection Overview

At the request of the Smith River Rancheria the Center for Indian Community Development at Humboldt State University worked with Dr. Albert Harris, professor of Government and Politics Department, Joan Berman, Library of Special Collections, and Delia M. Sharp, graduate student, to develop and collect historical records for a Smith River Rancheria tribal archival collection. The research and collection of historical documents was done at a variety of museums, libraries, and national archives. Ethnographic materials, school records, language documents, and museum pieces, such as baskets and fishing nets were not included as part of the historical records or materials collected for this project. Please note, however, that there are many language documents in the Southwestern Oregon Research Project (SWORP) collection included in this archive.

Several of the historical documents that were collected for this project are from the San Bruno National Archives Record Group 75 (Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) Records) and Record Group 49 (Bureau of Land Management (BLM) Records). All archival folders at the San Bruno National Archives relating specifically to the Tolowa, the Smith River Rancheria, and the Elk Valley Rancheria were copied. The records collected include minutes of past meetings, constitutions and by-laws, welfare records, and land assignment records. The majority of this information is found in Record Group 75. The search for project related documents required searching in for Hoopa, Yurok, and Round Valley records. There are also folders pertaining specifically to termination of the Elk Valley and Smith River Rancherias. Documents were found in the land correspondence files that pertain directly to the Smith River Rancheria and also to a person named Charlie Mack. In Record Group 49 (BLM Records) there were maps of Township Survey Plats from 1856 and 1907 that specifically reference the Smith River Indian Reservation. Several allotment records were found for "Smith River Indians" in a box containing records for allotments outside of any reservation. Approximately thirty probate records were also found.

The California State Parks Archeology Lab in Sacramento, California holds a report written by archeologist Edwin C. Bearss describing Del Norte and Humboldt Counties in reference to the indigenous population. The report is a compilation of many other archaeologists' work and is a secondary resource. Since this is not a primary resource, it was not included in the archive, but most of the information in the report pertaining to Smith River Rancheria and Tolowa peoples was found in primary documents elsewhere and has been included in the archive project. A hardcopy of the report has been provided to the Tribe through this project. The Humboldt State University Library also has a copy in its collection.

The Seattle branch of the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) has a limited quantity of materials germane to this project. In general, the records held in Seattle do not pertain in even an indirect way to the Smith River Reservation/Rancheria or to the Tolowa tribal group. Most of the Record Group 75 information in the Seattle NARA branch refers to Oregon and Washington tribes. The few materials gathered from the Seattle NARA are in an archival box labeled References and have been given to the Smith River Rancheria. These references are:

1) An index of microfilm reproductions of handwritten transcripts of communications sent by the Office of Indian Affairs (OIA), the office which preceded the BIA, during the March, 1824 - January, 1882 period. The letters include instructions to superintendents, agents, and other field officials of the Office; reports to the secretary of War; acknowledgments of and replies to incoming letters, notices of appointment, and other communications concerning different aspects of Office operations. Most of the volumes are indexed by name of addressee, with some index entries for subjects.

2) An index of letters received by the OIA, 1824-1880. On 962 rolls of microfilm is reproduced most of the correspondence received by the central office of the OIA in this period. The records reproduced here consist of communications received from superintendents, agents, and other field officials of the Bureau. This correspondence relates to the general welfare of the Indians, health, education, subsistence agriculture, and areas such as allotments, claims, emigration and the like. An index of tribes and "more important bands" of Indians under the supervision of agencies and superintendencies during the years 1824-1880, with the jurisdictional headings under which correspondence concerning them is filed.

3) Final Rolls of the Confederated Tribes of the Grand Rhone Community, April 1956.

4) Final Rolls of the Confederated Tribes of the Siletz Indians, July 1956.

The Phoebe Hearst Museum on the UC Berkeley campus provided a listing of everything they had regarding Smith River, Elk Valley, Del Norte County, and Tolowa. Their collection includes artifacts such as baskets and fishing nets. Copies of the Hearst Museum materials were not included in for this archive, but the list has been given to the Tribe and is in a box labeled References.

The Bancroft Library is the archeology library on the UC Berkeley campus. The key item of interest found here was the Diary of the Smith River Rancheria for the years 1866-1868. It was given to the Bancroft Library by Thomas Peacock, and Al Logan Slagle also has a copy. A copy of the diary has been included in the archives project.

Box, Folder, and CD Titles

Titles in the finding guide exactly match the titles on folders and boxes. However, some of these titles have been abbreviated on the CDs due to computer limitations on title lengths. When a title was abbreviated on a CD, it was changed as little as possible so that it could be matched to the finding guide, to the boxes, and to the folders.

Series 1: Record Group 75 – Bureau of Indian Affairs

Administrative History

An Office of Indian Affairs was established in 1824 within the War Department, which had exercised jurisdiction over relations with Indian tribes since the formation of the Federal Government. The Office operated informally within the War Department until Congress authorized the appointment of a Commissioner of Indian Affairs in 1832. The Office was transferred to the Department of the Interior in 1849. Although commonly called the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), it was not officially designated that until 1947.

The Bureau is responsible for most of the Federal Government's relations with the tribes of Indians that it recognizes. Some groups of Indians, particularly in the Eastern States, have never received official recognition, and other groups ceased to function as cohesive tribes before the establishment of the Federal Government in 1789. The Bureau has only exercised responsibility for Indians living on a recognized reservation or who maintained an affiliation with a recognized tribe. Many persons of Indian descent are not mentioned in any of the Bureau's records because they severed all connection with any tribe.

The Bureau's programs have had an impact on virtually every aspect of Indian life including education, health, land ownership, financial affairs, employment, and legal rights. In 1931, the Bureau assumed jurisdiction over the Indians and Eskimos of Alaska from the Alaska Division of the Office of Education, which had been established in 1885 to administer education and health programs for the natives of Alaska. In 1955, most of the Bureau's health activities, including the operation of Indian Hospitals, were transferred to the Public Health Service.

When it was created in 1824, the Bureau inherited a well-established system of agencies, each of which was responsible for all relations with one or more tribes. Many of these agencies were subordinate to a superintendency which had general responsibility for Indian affairs in a territory or other geographical area. Although there were numerous changes in agency designations and jurisdictions, this basic organizational structure remained unchanged until superintendencies were abolished in the 1870's and all agents began reporting directly to the Bureau headquarters in Washington, DC. In 1947, area offices were established to exercise supervisory control over agencies and other administrative units (such as schools or irrigation districts) within specific geographic regions.

In addition to the agents who were responsible for the day-to-day implementation of Indian policy, the Bureau often sent officials into the field for special purposes. These included treaty commissioners, inspectors, purchasing and disbursing agents, enrolling and allotting agents, and education specialists.

Historians also find useful information in real estate inventories.

Series 3: The Diary of the Smith River Reservation: 1866-1868

“The only records of the daily activities of known Tolowas from truly contemporary sources are in the daily log book of the Smith River Rancheria, a rare and important document, called The Smith River Indian Reservation: 1866-1868. Other tribes were put on the reservation at this time, including Wiyots and Takilmas. Thomas Peacock, the editor of the Del Norte Triplicate, wrote an introduction to this unpublished manuscript:

The following is from a diary kept of the accounts of the Smith River Indian Reservation Ranch. The daily entries into the diary are made by many different persons, none identified. The original diary is in the possession of Marian Peacock Beasley. Many years ago someone started to use it as a scrap book—and about the first 50 pages are covered with pasted-in-news items, etc. of various sorts. The balance I have had xeroxed.

“Peacock presented these materials to Loren Bommelyn, Tolowa, a member of the Del Norte Historical Society, realizing its historical significance. It consists of pages numbered 39 to 216. This manuscript gives the only available record of daily life in any period of Tolowa life since conquest, and only exists because of the reservation experience. The aims of the federal government regarding the surviving Tolowas was very clear here: education in agriculture and simple handicrafts, animal husbandry and carpentry, as well as mechanical skills, to supply the reservation, and then the local whites, with a source of cheap labor. The Tolowa reservation lasted only a few years.

“The Smith River Reservation annuals are very specific in supplying daily details of work, weather, arrivals, and departures of white workers or supervisors of the Indians charges, births, deaths, and sickness among the people and livestock, trips to and from Crescent City, accusations of witchcraft and petty offenses among the Tolowas on the Reservation, recollections of parties, and enumerations of harvests of the produce and livestock on the Reservation. These are unimaginative notes and suggest a very settled lifestyle, with work every day except for Sundays, in good weather. There seemed to have been little effort to proselytize the Tolowas into Christian churches at this time, little criminality, and little opportunity to drink or availability of alcohol, at least on the Reserve. The chroniclers amused themselves with making up cute little epithets to apply to the Indians: ‘dusky virgins,’ ‘unbleached Americans,’ in addition to the usual ‘bucks and does,’ ‘redskins and squaws.’

“What follows, except in that the text is wrapped – around instead of being confined to line-by-line reproduction, is an exact transcription of the document. I have numbered the pages as indicated in the manuscript, indicated marginal notes in the brackets, preserved the spellings of the writers as much as possible, as well as the often-idiosyncratic punctuations one might expect in an informal diary of this kind. However, the meanings are almost always facially evident.”

Accn: CILS

Date: 1993

Description: The documents contained herein include an appeal to the Board of Supervisors of a Del Norte Planning Commission action to allow development of a parcel residing within the exterior boundaries of the Smith River Rancheria. The appeal takes the position that the parcel is not suited for this development, which would include a septic system, because of the high ground water level on the parcel and surrounding areas. The appeal contends that adequate testing for septic system insertion has not been conducted.

Also included in the file is a Coastal Planning Commission determination regarding the construction of three replacement homes, and three new homes on parcels sited within the boundaries of the Smith River Rancheria. The determination finds that the planned construction does not violate the Federal Consistency Provisions of the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972 as amended by the California Coastal Commission.

Folder 3: Letter to Del Norte County from Dr. Block

Accn: CILS

Date: September 29, 1992

Description: This folder contains a letter from William Roop, consulting archaeologist, to the Del Norte County Planning Commission, regarding a prehistoric archaeological site on a parcel of land between Prince Island Court and Island View Court. The site was apparently occupied by Tolowa Indians well into the nineteenth century, as evidence by artifacts found at the site. The site has been subject to vandalism despite the efforts of local residents close to the site.

One of the local residents has offered to build a home on the site as a means to protect it from further vandalism. In the letter Mr. Roop agrees this is a viable means of protecting a site of considerable religious significance. Also included in the folder are two cases from California case law which demonstrate the importance of correctly conducting an Environmental Impact Report (EIR). These cases specifically address the need to conduct an adequate archaeological review of sites before issuing construction permits, and to address criticisms registered in a draft EIR, in the Final EIR.

Folder 4: Staff Report Reservation Ranch

Accn: CILS

Date: 1990

Description: The material in this folder pertains to a proposed subdivision of an 84 acre parcel of land in Del Norte County. The folder included a Staff Report of the Environmental Review Committee, which details how a Draft Environmental Impact Report (EIR) was prepared and reviewed by the Environmental Review Committee, the Coastal Planning Commission, Dept. of Fish and Game, Regional Water Quality Board, Cal Trans, and the Honwonquet Indian Council. The owner of the parcel, Reservation Ranch, originally proposed 62 lots on the property. The Report discusses in detail how Reservation Ranch is obligated to fulfill certain stipulations, included archaeological review, adequate testing of soils for water and sewer, and adequate protection of Indian access for fishing.

Also included in the folder is an approval document from Del Norte County of the Twin Rocks Subdivision, subject to certain conditions and obligation being met by the developer, Reservation Ranch. There is also a letter from Janet Eidsness, archaeological consultant for the Smith River Rancheria to the Del Norte County Planning Commission. In the letter Ms. Eidsness presents certain concerns of the Rancheria to the Commission regarding particularly the need to be cognizant of the archaeological significance of two sites identified within the subject property. Ms. Eidsness provides certain steps that should be taken in constructing the proposed subdivision order to prevent or mitigate any damage to the sites in question.

Folder 1: Fort Terwah Journal

Date: Oct. 1861 –Jan. 1869

Description: This document is a journal compiled over the years 1861 through 1869, with a single entry for the year 1880. It appears to be authored by a Mr. Curtis, a volunteer in the military company led by a Captain Stuart. Curtis arrived at Fort Terwah from Calaveras County, CA in March, 1862, after having enlisted in the Army in October, 1861. The document is written in long hand, with a quill pen, and is illegible in certain sections.

Mr. Curtis describes a firefight with Indians in April, 1862, resulting in several Indians killed. The Indians are not clearly identified, but there may be a reference to "Hoopa." The location of the firefight is not specifically given. In the same year the author remarks that the rivers are "alive with fish." The author notes the Indians scoop them out and smoke them.

In August, 1862, there is a report of Indians "raising the devil," at Red Wood Camp and at Trinidad. The identity of the Indians is not provided. The detachment at Fort Terwah apparently responded, but the nature of the response is not given.

Through 1862-1863 there is much attention given to the resignations, desertions of certain men at the Fort. An account is given of various arrests and disciplinary actions taken against these individuals.

In Sept., 1864, there is a report of a conference between a group of Indians and their Chief (the identities of both are given, but are illegible) with certain personnel at the Fort. What topics or issues were discussed during the conference and why the conference was deemed necessary at this time was not provided.

In August, 1866, work was begun on the Del Norte Comstock copper mine. The journal's author participated in this work on various occasions.

In June-July, 1867, work began on the construction of a “road to the valley.” This work was undertaken by the Alta (?) Company (the spelling is unclear). The company utilized the labor of several dozen “Chinamen.”

In August, 1867 the journal’s author apparently sold 1905 shares of stock in the Dardinelles (?) Co. (spelling unclear), after a delinquent assessment was rendered. It is not clear what entity made this assessment, nor against whom.

On Oct. 8, 1867, the journal’s author took a trip during which he “took dinner on the Reservation.” After the dinner the journal author rode into town with the Indian Agent. The name of the Agent is given but is illegible. It is not clear to which Reservation the reference is intended. One inference which might be made, given the location and date, is that the reference is to either the Smith River Reservation, or to the Hoopa Reservation, both of which were operating in this period.

In July, 1869, the journal author “hired an Indian” to help in the conveyance of heavy provisions on a trip. The Indian was dismissed after a portion of the trip was completed. In August, 1869, the journal author served as a witness in a court case apparently deciding an issue of theft. There is no indication this case had any links to Indian tribal members.

In Jan., 1869, at Big Bar on the Smith River, the journal author had cause to purchase an interest in tools and provisions. The amount of the purchase was $45. The next, and last, entry in the journal is to record the birth of a girl (Mary) in May, 1880.
